- RCMP and OPP assembled the foremost experts (POU, Incident Commanders and Planners) from across Canada to develop a strategic plan, including an RCMP forensic physiologist, who specializes in crowd dynamic, and possesses the necessary academic and operational credentials to provide expert evidence related to justifying the use of force.
- Their recommendations are consistent with the important lessons learned from the Ipperwash Inquiry and The Morden Report into the G20.
- This group of experts has determined that there are crowd engagement and negotiation strategies that must be relied upon before the application of force would be justified.
- Those individuals who are less committed to the cause may voluntarily leave after a short, intense and strategic engagement and negotiation strategic is applied.
- To be effective, the officers engaging in the engagement/negotiation strategy need a lever – something that they can use to build trust and negotiate with, such as a meeting with government officials, after they (demonstrators) comply with certain conditions within a defined period of time.
- This is an essential step to identify the leaders and reduce the foot print to a manageable size to safety and justifiably transition to planned enforcement.
- We must be cautious that enforcement is not seen to be at the direction of government – over and above obviously liabilities, this would empower the current freedom movement and potentially strengthen their influence with revolution-minded individuals, potentially leading to riotous behaviours across the country.
- This group has the benefit of former intelligence officers, retired and serving police officers who understand tactics and the limited capacity of the police; therefore, to ensure the safety of our officers, any enforcement must be well thought-out and, ideally, carried out on the smallest possible footprint.
- To execute a ethical, responsible and definable plan that is consistent the document advice of our subject matter experts from RCMP, OPP, YRP, WRP and TPS, best practices learned from previous incidents like Ipperwash, Oka Crisis and G20, and the Use of Force Model, our officers will require some time and space without additional political pressure.
